WHY USE MINT   HOW WE HELP   FIND SAVINGS   BLOG   ABOUT

Privacy and Security / Mint Security FAQ

Why does Mint need my bank login information (username and password)?

We need your online banking user name and passwords so that we can help you organize and manage your accounts. We use this information to establish a secure connection with your bank, credit union or credit card company. This enables Mint to download and categorize your transaction information securely and automatically.

Do you store my bank login information on your servers?

Your bank login credentials are stored securely in a separate database using multi-layered hardware and software encryption. We only store the information needed to save you the trouble of updating, syncing or uploading financial information manually.

Am I at greater risk of someone stealing my identity by using your service?

No, as Mint does not require any personally identifiable information for you to create an account. Mint only asks for the following:

- Email Address
- Zip Code
- Password

At no time do we ask you for information that would be required for a hacker to steal your identity, such as your full name, bank account numbers, credit card numbers, billing address.

Can Mint employees view my bank account numbers or credit card numbers?

Your bank account and credit card numbers are stored securely. Your information may be seen by technical personnel in accordance with specified procedures and safeguards governing access in order to operate, develop and improve the Service.
